BREAD CRUMBS SERIES

● puffed bread crumbs

Puffed bread crumbs are made from high-quality wheat flour and corn starch as the main ingredients. After being cut, dried and ground into particles, they are sent into the puffing equipment, under the action of high temperature and high pressure, the raw materials are rapidly puffed up in an instant, increasing in volume and forming a unique fluffy structure, thus obtaining bread crumbs with a crispy and chewy texture.

BREAD CRUMBS SERIES

● fermented bread crumbs

Fermented breadcrumbs use traditional techniques and take a longer production time. However, they have a natural fermentation aroma. Their shape is usually needle-like and the texture is loose. It has good coloring effect during frying process, and they are not likely to fall off.

dry breadcrumbs: mainly used for coating fried foods to form a crispy crust.

fresh breadcrumbs: soft and sticky texture and is often used in dishes that require a sticky texture, such as meatballs and hamburger patties

- Seasoned
- Orleans Seasoning

Orleans seasoning is a kind of compound seasoning (containing food additives) or a compound spice blend.

Spices are derived from the seeds, flower buds, leaves, stems, roots, etc. of plants, or their extracts. They have stimulating fragrances and impart flavor to food, enhance appetite, and aid digestion and absorption.

- Paste Powder
- White Paste Powder

It is mainly made by mixing flour, cornstarch and baking powder. The fried product has a golden color, crispy outside and tender inside. It is widely used in dishes such as fried chicken and hokkaido chicken. After preparation, it needs to be left to stand. Then, it is fried at an oil temperature of 170-180°C. Common coating methods include directly coating with flour, coating with oil and frying, or coating with breadcrumbs.
